

AMETHYST

The February birthstone is the most valuable of the quartz gemstones. It contains iron that is finely dispersed throughout the crystal. The color is caused by the presence of manganese oxide impurities. It is found in alluvial deposits all around the world and occurs in crystalline or massive form.

AMETHYST

The February birthstone is the most valuable of the quartz gemstones. It contains iron that is finely dispersed throughout the crystal. The color is caused by the presence of manganese oxide impurities. It is found in alluvial deposits all around the world and occurs in crystalline or massive form.

AMETHYST

The February birthstone is the most valuable of the quartz gemstones. It contains iron that is finely dispersed throughout the crystal. The color is caused by the presence of manganese oxide impurities. It is found in alluvial deposits all around the world and occurs in crystalline or massive form.

AMETHYST

The February birthstone is the most valuable of the quartz gemstones. It contains iron that is finely dispersed throughout the crystal. The color is caused by the presence of manganese oxide impurities. It is found in alluvial deposits all around the world and occurs in crystalline or massive form.

AMETHYST

The February birthstone is the most valuable of the quartz gemstones. It contains iron that is finely dispersed throughout the crystal. The color is caused by the presence of manganese oxide impurities. It is found in alluvial deposits all around the world and occurs in crystalline or massive form.

AMETHYST

The February birthstone is the most valuable of the quartz gemstones. It contains iron that is finely dispersed throughout the crystal. The color is caused by the presence of manganese oxide impurities. It is found in alluvial deposits all around the world and occurs in crystalline or massive form.