

Agadir Ammonite

This superb grade ammonite is solid stone featuring the fascinating ridged surface of the ancient creature's shell. These extinct marine animals thrived in the Paleozoic and Mesozoic Eras, some 400 to 65 million years ago. They suddenly vanished at the end of the Cretaceous period. These specimens were excavated from the coastal Moroccan village of Agadir.

Agadir Ammonite

This superb grade ammonite is solid stone featuring the fascinating ridged surface of the ancient creature's shell. These extinct marine animals thrived in the Paleozoic and Mesozoic Eras, some 400 to 65 million years ago. They suddenly vanished at the end of the Cretaceous period. These specimens were excavated from the coastal Moroccan village of Agadir.

Agadir Ammonite

This superb grade ammonite is solid stone featuring the fascinating ridged surface of the ancient creature's shell. These extinct marine animals thrived in the Paleozoic and Mesozoic Eras, some 400 to 65 million years ago. They suddenly vanished at the end of the Cretaceous period. These specimens were excavated from the coastal Moroccan village of Agadir.

Agadir Ammonite

This superb grade ammonite is solid stone featuring the fascinating ridged surface of the ancient creature's shell. These extinct marine animals thrived in the Paleozoic and Mesozoic Eras, some 400 to 65 million years ago. They suddenly vanished at the end of the Cretaceous period. These specimens were excavated from the coastal Moroccan village of Agadir.

Agadir Ammonite

This superb grade ammonite is solid stone featuring the fascinating ridged surface of the ancient creature's shell. These extinct marine animals thrived in the Paleozoic and Mesozoic Eras, some 400 to 65 million years ago. They suddenly vanished at the end of the Cretaceous period. These specimens were excavated from the coastal Moroccan village of Agadir.

Agadir Ammonite

This superb grade ammonite is solid stone featuring the fascinating ridged surface of the ancient creature's shell. These extinct marine animals thrived in the Paleozoic and Mesozoic Eras, some 400 to 65 million years ago. They suddenly vanished at the end of the Cretaceous period. These specimens were excavated from the coastal Moroccan village of Agadir.